

JLL Adds Senior Vice President to Agency Leasing Team in Seattle

SEATTLE, September 15, 2014 – With an expanding, diversified economy, robust job growth and Seattle’s stock rising among commercial real estate markets nationwide, JLL has expanded its presence in agency leasing in the Seattle-Bellevue market with the appointment of Lloyd Low as Senior Vice President.

Low joins a veteran Seattle agency leasing team led by Stuart Williams and Joe Gowan. In this capacity he will provide leasing services for existing clients as well as work to expand the JLL footprint among institutional landlords in the local market.

“This is an opportune time for landlords, many of whom have come through the recession with bangs and bruises and now face a rising commercial real estate market in which a wide array of tenants seems to be looking to lock in space for the long term,” said Stuart Williams, Managing Director, JLL. “Lloyd Low has many years experience in advising landlords in and around downtown Seattle throughout the market cycle and his addition to our team enhances our services to our institutional clients at a time in which they need our expertise the most.”

JLL’s agency leasing team now has more than 40 years of experience advising landlords in the Seattle market. Low’s focus will primarily be in Seattle’s Central Business District, where the firm currently represents several high profile assets in the South Lake Union and Waterfront submarkets and approximately 3.9 million square feet of Class A office space.

JLL completed over 3.7 million square feet of office lease transactions in Seattle’s CBD on behalf of landlords in 2013.

A Seattle native, Lloyd earned his degree from the University of Washington and actively supports local charities and organizations, including Boys & Girls Clubs of Washington. Lloyd is also a member of the Washington Athletic Club and Seattle Golf Club.
